POLITICAL.

President Cleveland went to his home in Buffalo and voted the straight Democratic ticket in the Ninth Ward. A dispatch from Buffalo says: "The President arrived by special train on the Lehigh Valley Railway. He was accompanied by Wilson S. Bissell, his late law partner, A. W. Steadman, chief engineer of the road, and John M. Jeter, doorkeeper of the Capitol. The President is looking finely, and the party played a pleasant game of 'sixty-six' from Hornellville to Buffalo. All along the line of travel large crowds gathered, and at Darien fireworks were shot off, but the train did not stop. Only moderate time was made on the last part of the route. At the Buffalo depot the President was met by a crowd, but no demonstration was made."

The amendment to the constitution of Ohio to abolish October elections was carried by a majority of 537,000.

The President returned to Washington immediately after the election in New York. A Washington telegram says: "His face wore a broad smile all day and he feels that his administration has been endorsed by the State of New York. Telegrams to confirm his opinion have been arriving all day, and the President feels that his policy has been approved by his party. Upon reaching the Executive Mansion he went immediately to the library and found two or three hundred telegrams congratulating him on the result of the election in New York State. Before reading these the President wrote and sent to Governor Hill a telegram warmly congratulating him on his election."

President Cleveland, in an interview with a member of the editorial staff of the Washington Post, expressed himself as follows in regard to the reorganization of the Civil Service Commission:

The reorganization of the commission was made necessary by the resignation of the members of the old board. In such reorganization it seemed to me that friends for the cause could be made in the party to which I belong, and which is at present to a large extent, charged with the enforcement of the law, by changing the political complexion of the commission. This view was, I think, shared by all the old Commissioners, and the change has thus far progressed with some but the best of feeling, so far as I know, on their part. In the selection of the new Commissioners there were as many different qualifications which I deemed desirable that I have found it no easy matter to fill the position with men who could combine the elements which I consider most useful to the fair, honest, and successful enforcement of the law. Prominent leaders in the civil service movement strongly advised me to select one of the Commissioners from the South. This I have done, and the person selected from that locality I am quite certain possesses all the qualifications for an efficient officer. Mr. Edgerton I never saw until yesterday, and I don't remember that I ever heard of him until Chief Justice Waite urged him upon my attention as a most excellent man for the place. From my impression of him upon a personal interview, and from representations made by his friends, I am entirely satisfied that no mistake has been made in his appointment. I cannot rid myself of the idea that this civil service reform is something intended to do practical good, and not a mere sentiment intended for the purpose of affording opportunity to ventilate high-sounding notions and phrases. My plan of giving it the greatest publicity possible involves the selection of men who are inclined to its support, and to present it to the Legislature as a whole, and I certainly intend to select them for the two reasons, one, on political grounds, and the other, and this I deem largely in deference to the sentiment and opinions held by the people, that if possible, I will give the new ones. The resignation of the report of the commission is a most important matter, affording an occasion to recommend the reform to the people by exhibiting to them all it has accomplished, and the report ought to be very useful, too, of removing misapprehensions, and objections.

Edward Hanlan, the oarsman, indignantly denies that he made overtures to Teomer to sell the race between them. Hanlan has had published three letters written by Teomer, the import of which is that Teomer was ready and willing to "sell out." A circular has been issued by the Panama Canal Company, intended to allay the apprehensions of stockholders, who have recently been assessed 125 francs a share, which announces that the final period of work on the canal will commence on Jan. 1. Just what this means is not clearly understood. A copy of the circular has been received at Washington, and was read with a good deal of curiosity at the State and Navy Departments, and the general opinion is that it is a piece of deception to beguile ignorant stockholders into sinking more money into the hopeless undertaking.

The company has derived vast revenues from the sale of its lands, towns, etc.

There were 156 failures in the United States reported during the week, against 170 in the preceding week, and 106, 218 and 149 in the corresponding weeks of 1884, 1885 and 1882. Bradstreet's Journal, in its weekly trade review, says:

The general movement of dry goods has been light, and on the whole disappointing. At Boston there has been a smaller business during the week than for a long time past. The orders are not expected until settled cold weather appears. An encouraging feature is found in the fact that, while the mills are producing in excess of one year ago, no complaints are heard, while early in November, 1884, there were pronounced demands for a further restriction of production. The demand for grocery staples has been only moderate, with sugar and Brazil coffee lower. Fancy grades of butter are higher. Cheese is dull, with light export demand. Iron, steel, and coal present no new features as compared with last week. Hog products are higher on a better home and export demand, as well as in sympathy with the price of corn.
